Second Sunday of Lent (Year A – Matthew): We believe in a God who is involved in human history. He is also a God of new beginnings. They can be seen in the history of his people as a whole, but also they are frequent occurrences in the lives of each of us individuals in our response to the call to holiness. And our personal sanctification is one of our central preoccupations during the Lenten season. In the OT we see this new beginning, fresh start, in the relationship between God and Adam, Noah and Abraham. In the new relationship foreshadowed in Abraham, as it grew and developed Moses and Elijah were stations on the journey. In Jesus Christ, God has become visible and audible. Furthermore, God wants to be recognised, to be seen and listened to through us and in the witness we give to him. We who call ourselves Christian make God manifest in the world of today.

First Reading (OT): Genesis 12, 1 – 4: With the collapse of the Tower of Babel, the relationship between God and his people seemed to have run into the sand. But with the call issued to Abraham God starts something new: salvation history. Abraham hears the appeal: leave your country ... and your father's house! There is a promise attached, blessings will be bestowed. Abraham does leave, he sets out without knowing where his decision will lead him. [So many holy men and women in Christian history have done precisely that]. The only light he had to illuminate his path was the word of God.

Second Reading (NT): 2 Timothy 1, 8 – 10: The arrival of Jesus Christ in the weakness of human flesh and it was an “appearance/epiphany” of God's grace. It has become public, God wants to save all men and women. He calls all to Baptism, the “the light of unchangeable life”, but also to work for the Good News and through participation in the sufferings of Christ.

Gospel: Matthew 17, 1 – 9: It was only after Jesus had risen from the dead that the three apostles who were present with him on the mountain understood what they had witnessed. The cloud of light and the voice from heaven affirmed for them that Jesus was the Christ, the Son of the living God. The Law and the Prophets were indicators of his true identity, represented here by Moses and Elijah. The “beloved Son” was destined to suffer and that too, it was suggested, was the path the disciples of Jesus were also set to follow. There are possible natural explanations of the phenomenon known as “transfiguration.” Was it that Jesus was so caught up in the mystic rapture of his prayer on the mountain [mountains in the OT tradition were places of privileged encounter between men and God] that he was radiant, transformed, transfigured? In any case, it was a unique moment in the public life of Jesus and one which is described, in virtually identical terms, by all of the three synoptic evangelists. It certainly marked a new beginning, or at least a new stage, in Jesus' earthly life and set him resolutely towards his passion.
